Dissertation Research Award

Applications are now available for the fall 2009 Dissertation Research Award.

The program is open to doctoral students in a transportation-related discipline area who have been admitted to Candidacy by the Graduate School with a dissertation proposal approved by their supervisory committee.

Funding is available for up to two semesters, and the primary reason is to support students in their efforts to conduct and/or complete their dissertation research. Funding beyond two semesters is possible and based on satisfactory progress toward completion of the dissertation.

Applicants may use the funding for data collection, stipend, tuition, etc. Applicants must submit a proposal, including a budget and timeline.

Proposals will be evaluated on the basis of the candidate’s academic achievement, dissertation topic and research design, two letters of support from UF faculty (one of these should be from the student’s dissertation advisor) and the suitability of the requested amount of funding.

The CMS is a U.S. Department of Transportation Tier 1 grant-funded center devoted to the advancement of research, education, and technology transfer, in congestion modeling and management.
